I'm finishing a full report on the mechanism of the Intel ME controller and the AMT technology based on it.\nA lot of undocumented commands were recovered by reversing, dumping the interaction interface and phasing.\nUnfortunately, the initial theory based on the presentation of Embedi/PositiveTechnologies reservers is not confirmed as they presented it, but there is another legal mechanism to activate AMT, but until the working POC has not reached, at the moment I make a buffer sniffer which provides HECI interface, because it is all configured in the UEFI then sniffer took a little longer, after I fully restore the set of commands, will be prepared POK.\I have ideas, if we talk about uefi is not just a load dropper but probably some SMM level daemon handlers, plus as now tightly studied the controller ME, the idea is to test such a functionality as a flash SPI overwrite through it. Usually this controller is allowed to write to the flash, which can not be said about the processor, and were found some commands which are responsible for this functionality.

Find the place where crypto holders communicate (discord, etc.).
Learn the IP nodes. Most likely it will be IPv6. Let's start snooping. Hop into chat room, found earlier and write that there is a problem, crypto is not output, operations are not performed. (since crypto depends on mining, there will indeed be problems).
Holders become nervous and withdraw the main balance. Crypto drops in value. We buy at a low price. We let go of the ddos. Crypt goes up again. We come out in the black. Or the option of writing to the creators about the possibility of a buyback if they want the ddos to end. From the main problematic points is the implementation of Ipv6 ddos."

Use-after-Free in the WIDFRD.sys driver. The exploit is implemented in Windows 10 x64 1607, 1703, 1709, 1803, 1809, 1903, 1909. It is present in 2004 and later, but the corresponding code in the driver was rewritten, and OS crashes in BSOD before the target vulnerability is triggered on null pointer dereferencing. There are some nuances on exploitation: not all systems may be vulnerable, as there is a dependency on hardware configuration. Exploitation takes place by disabling SMEP (CR4 modification), modifying PTE/PML4 if necessary, and executing code that performs token replacement of the target process with the system one. I publish the announcement here, because my regular customers do not need / do not fit, and in the personal from those who on the forum expressed a desire to buy, no one answers. The price of 60k is negotiable.

If you want, I can write and give you a utility, which, when running on the system of interest, will tell you if the OS is vulnerable or not. First contact in the PM, then in the jabber. Completing this: The exploit is for sale in one hand.\nIn video

The process wud.exe launches, exploiting the vulnerability.wud.exe creates the process cmd.exe and does A 5-second pause for a privilege check. I run notepad.exe (instance 1) from the created console. After a while, I check my privileges and launch notepad.exe (instance 2). I check the level of cmd.exe and notepad.exe instance2 one by one in Process Explorer. I can see that the instance is running1 with medium IL, the second (when cmd.exe's permissions were already elevated) with SYSTEM."

      "body": "Good afternoon. There is a 0-day privilege escalation exploit for a

Use-after-Free in the WIDFRD.sys driver. The exploit is implemented in Windows 10 x64 1607, 1703, 1709, 1803, 1809, 1903, 1909. It is present in 2004 and later, but the corresponding code in the driver was rewritten, and OS crashes in BSOD before the target vulnerability is triggered on null pointer dereferencing. There are some nuances on exploitation: not all systems may be vulnerable, as there is a dependency on hardware configuration. Exploitation takes place by disabling SMEP (CR4 modification), modifying PTE/PML4 if necessary, and executing code that performs token replacement of the target process with the system one. I publish the announcement here, because my regular customers do not need / do not fit, and in the personal from those who on the forum expressed a desire to buy, no one answers. The price of 60k is negotiable.

If you want, I can write and give you a utility, which, when running on the system of interest, will tell you if the OS is vulnerable or not. First contact in the PM, then in the jabber. I'll add more: Exploit is for sale in one hands. Video of work: <https://filetransfer.io/data-package/ctyCDTW6#link> Password: bvdiviy2861rVJVl. What happens in the video: 1. The process wud.exe launches, exploiting the vulnerability. wud.exe creates the process cmd.exe and does a 5-second pause for a privilege check. I run notepad.exe (instance 1) from the created console. After a while, I check my privileges and launch notepad.exe (instance 2). I check the level of cmd.exe and notepad.exe instance2 one by one in Process Explorer. I can see that the instance is running1 with medium IL, the second (when cmd.exe's permissions were already elevated) with SYSTEM."
