known layers:\n-the P2P network that connects nodes;\n-the distributed database (DAG or blockchain) that stores some blocks and provides clients with trust in what it stores;\n-what is the payload in blocks - transactions or whatever, even pictures or DeFi.\nAnd these layers are independent, provide interfaces to each

Here's the thing. I took a closer look at Exonum. The point is, it's just a blueprint for a blockchain. I'm not an expert in Rust yet, but despite my conservatism in programming languages (I don't use anything except C++), I suddenly liked Rust. I've already finished more than a third of textbook in 600+ pages.nnIt's true, development in Rust is faster than in C++.nnIn general, if we believe Exonum developers, it's possible to roll your own blockchain very fast. If you don't mind, I'll take care of it next week, then I'll report back.

The second one, we will explain you a little bit deeper about amount: The Conti has a big legal department and it checks all the possible data and sources to establish an appropriate amount. We check your annual income, the value of materials (you have a lot of SENSITIVE and PRIVATE files, Military budget and so on), etc.

Also, please don't forget about the decryption software and our expenses.

Therefore, basing on all the info, we set a 5% amount for a payment. FYI, every our client is asked to pay this sum, you are not unique. But considering your situation we can give you very big discount - 20%. Now our price for you is $8kk."
